This week, the legendary baseball exec and author of The Baseball Codes, Peter Gammons, came on "The Dan Patrick Show" on ESPN Radio in Phoenix to talk about all things potential playoff teams and drama. Patrick, who will call baseball's wild-card game on Saturday, mentioned to Gammons that he had been following Derek Jeter's home record versus Alex Rodriguez, and not surprisingly, Jeter had a slightly more difficult time against the Yankees slugger. This roused Gammons' competitive urge, and eventually led to a heated discussion about what A-Rod should have done in Game 4 of the 2003 ALCS. "I think he should have benched himself or he should have walked himself or something," Gammons said. "I don't think that he earned a single at-bat. I don't know if his feet are on the ground. He said after the game, 'I had a feeling the season was coming to an end. I just didn't realize it would come to this.' That's what a team is supposed to do.

Q: Safari vs IE : browser window is in style "max-width" applied I have been using a web page for quite some time now and since I have been in university, my computer is being upgraded and unfortunately I have to use different OS. I have the same web page in my local machine (Windows 10 64bit, Chrome, IE11, FF 66.0.3) and in the university machines (Safari 10.1.1, IE 11). In the university machines, my browser window is smaller. The page has max-width and min-width as 100% because it's design is for 1024x768 or smaller. I tried to investigate in chrome and IE11 and found that max-width and min-width are not working but it works for Safari. I'm not sure if this is because of the OS? Please help! I found some solutions about that but my question is different. I was wondering if I have a page with max-width: 100% or min-width:100% (of the browser window) then, is it possible that Safari goes to 1024x768 and this keeps the browser window the same size (of 1024x768)? But in my school computers, it's going to 1024x768 and it's keep the browser window smaller and the page is not responsive. Is this possible to make my

The use of robots in the area of protection against nuclear radiation is an established area of research. Researchers in this area are interested in creating a robot that is capable of navigating around a site that has been contaminated by nuclear radiation, and then positioning itself such that it can safely enter the nuclear reactor and allow a human to enter for treatment. This is an area of research that is not too far in the future. The problem of diagnosing certain medical conditions using robot based medical tools is also well known. A problem that is developing is the monitoring of certain medical conditions, which takes into account the need to have a robot capable of both navigating around a nuclear contaminated area as well as be capable of operating for prolonged periods of time. The use of robots to both monitor and provide treatment to patients is well known. Such robots can take a variety of forms including medical robots for examining patients and then treating the patient. The problem with such robots is that they are usually operated by a human operator through use of an interface device that allows the operator to maneuver the robot to the next medical tool that needs to be used on the patient. This is most often done manually by the human operator who has to control the robot and then proceed with the next step in the medical procedure. It is an object of the present invention to provide a robot that is capable of both navigating a radiation contaminated area and providing medical treatment of a patient using robotic tools that can be attached to the robot in an integrated fashion. In addition to this, the robot should be capable of providing a fully automated medical service, that is, the robot can maneuver around a radiation contaminated area, and then move to the appropriate tool or tools for performing a medical procedure on a patient located within the radiation contaminated area.
