Add a Whole Lot More Tots to Your Family's Menu Family meals are a great way to interact and be together, but it can also be an epic waste of a perfectly good meal if everyone ends up eating the same things. In most cases, one parent will make the dinner, and the other parent(s) will order something from a delivery or convenience store. If we're not careful, we can spend half the meal (if not more) wondering what the others want to eat. For families with more than one child, it can be tougher to order a meal that is well-rounded enough to please the picky eaters, but still not too much for the "regulars." That's where gluten-free dishes come in. If you love pizza and the addition of gluten tends to make that dish a bit too dense for your taste, adding gluten-free soy sauce or gluten-free margarine can make it more appealing to the picky eaters. On the other hand, if your favorite dessert is gluten-free, you can easily make it more kid-friendly by swapping out gluten-based ingredients for a different protein like rice or nut butter. Once you start swapping out gluten for a suitable ingredient, you will find a lot of options. Check out a few of our favorites. Chicken nuggets for picky eaters For some, chicken nuggets are the best part of a fast food restaurant meal, and they are probably the best option for a picky eater.
